

'Syt y mae heddwy'—'I awn, diloch'

If you came near the Queen's Hotel yesterday evening and thought you were hearing things, you were.

You were hearing Welsh.

Inside the hotel, the common greeting was "Syt y mae heddwy," followed by the reply, "I awn, diloch."

The St David Society of Montreal was holding its annual banquet.

The dinner was composed of such delicacies as Bwyd Angylion, fruit cocktail; Cawl

Hufen Bwyd Barcut, cream of mushroom soup; Twrci Rhost Ilanw, roast stuffed turkey; Psy Gwyrdd Cymru, roast potatoes Parisienne, and Hufen Ia Mefus, parfait au fraise.

Dr. Samuels Davies, guest speaker, said Wales is the mother of men of character, and declared that the modern miracle of Wales is that her mountains and valleys are still today part of a civilization which through the centuries has changed little.
